"Better late than never."

I hope that you all believe that old saying, because this issue of TMNT, which seemed at times to be destined to never come out, is definitely late... by three or four months, I think. At this point, I can't even remember when we had originally scheduled it, although I know it was supposed to appear before issue #16. That requires a little explanation — generally, we like to run our books in ascending numerical order, but as Mark Martin had finished and delivered his wild and crazy issue, while my story was still in the pencil stages, we decided that, rather than make you readers wait another two months before another issue of TMNT came out, we would be radical and publish #16 before #15. Simple, right? Yeah. Sorry about the confusion, folks, and we promise to never do it again... or at least to try not to.

Apology #2: A lot of you have been watching your mailboxes for the arrival of your limited edition hardcover TMNT books for a long time. Those books are just beginning to show up in said mailboxes, and we are very sorry it took so long. There are a number of reasons why, but the two most important ones are (a) we had never put together a book of such length and complexity, and seriously underestimated the time it would take, and (b) the printer and bindery took a lot longer to print and bind the darn thing than we had anticipated. To soften the sting of the lateness of the book, we have been including a gift certificate with each hardcover, good for $5.00 worth of Mirage Studios comics. We appreciate the patience of the great majority of you good folks, but deplore the rotten attitudes of some who wrote us letters implying that we were taking their money with no intention of ever putting out the book. Not only was that a completely erroneous conclusion without a logical base, it was also insulting and demeaning to us. We can understand your frustration, but just because the books were a few months late is no reason to call us crooks. After all, our motto is "If it's not late, it's not a Mirage book!"

In any event, we're glad that the books are done, and are all sent off to their respective purchasers. The next time we do something like this, it will be much more completely planned out. In the meantime, I hope that you enjoy this bit of silliness we call Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles #15!

The pin-up in this issue is by Don Laird, and his being my older brother has absolutely nothing to do with his pin-up appearing in this issue.

For the true Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtle completist, check out issue #20 of the PUMA BLUES (the benefit issue). I wrote and pencilled a four-page story which Kev inked, and which features Raphael as you've never seen him before. A taste of things to come...?

Oh, and I can't forget the back cover — a piece that Kev and I did; a self-portrait in the studio, done as an ad for the second issue of New Age Comics (a Fantagraphics ad-rag). Unfortunately, that book folded and this art never saw print... until now.
